

COLLEGE PREP GUIDE

This guide was created to assist in college prep!

There are several scholarship opportunities for you to consider. Scholarships are available for individuals in current treatment, cancer survivors, and family members who have been affected by cancer. Some of the scholarships are disease-specific or only available to certain geographic areas. Others are not cancer-specific, but maybe worth researching. Scholarship opportunities are available for full-time or part-time students. Students entering either undergraduate or graduate programs at an accredited two- or four-year college, university, or vocational-technical/trade school.

If you find that any of the information is out of date or inaccurate, please let us know so we can continue to update our information.

If you are followed by a provider at Penn State Children's Hospital, please reach out to your assigned social worker if you require any medical verification letters or references

Making the RIGHT Transition into College

From Picking a School to Paying for it – A Guide for Cancer Survivors

RIGHTFunding

There are many forms of financial aid based on need, merit, talent, or other qualifications. Your high school guidance counselor is a great resource for the kinds of financial aid you may qualify for. Know your deadlines.

As a cancer survivor, there are dozens of funding opportunities available to you. In addition to FAFSA (federal student aid), loans and work study, you may be eligible for a variety of highly specialized scholarships and grants available only to survivors. These can be general, such as NCCS's "Beyond the Cure Ambassador Scholarship" or specific to certain types of childhood cancers. Do your research – there are plenty of funding sources to which you can apply. In addition to cancer related scholarships, you may want to think outside the "cancer box." When applying for a cancer related scholarship you're competing against hundreds of cancer survivors. Consider a scholarship in an area of interest such as band or a local community based organization that is not cancer related; your survivorship story may stand out.

Each application will request different information – know the organization, know your deadlines, include all the information requested and take your time completing the application. When submitting an essay, tell your survivorship story in your own words and have someone proof what you wrote.

RIGHTInformation

Being your biggest advocate starts with knowing your rights and your records. If you identify as having a disability, or a late effect that may impact your learning, you have rights! Talk to your doctor to see if you qualify. Some of the laws that protect you are listed below; for more information, talk to your high school guidance counselor or contact NCCS.

Your Laws

1. Rehabilitation Act of 1973
2. Americans with Disabilities Act
3. Family Education Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA)

Your Records

For all students entering college, it's important to have your records in order. These include high school transcripts, SAT and ACT test scores and letters of recommendation (plan ahead for these – be sure to allow at least four-six weeks for letters to be written).

As a cancer survivor, you will also want to have copies of your medical history on file. Talk to your doctor to obtain the necessary documentation in case you choose to file for extended time, other disability-related services at college or in case a medical situation develops.

NOTE: If you have an Individual Education Plan (IEP) or 504 Plan, disclosure is NOT required unless accommodations are requested. Before you graduate, request an up-to-date copy of your IEP as well as a current assessment – it's always better to have an IEP or 504 plan in place and up-to-date (even if you're not receiving services) than to back-track once in college.

RIGHTResources

Surviving cancer was tough. Surviving the transition into college is, too. Finding your place on campus is something that will take time; go at your own pace, and expect a few stumbles, but be sure to enjoy the ride along the way. The transition may be tough, but college will be the time of your life - trust us!

And remember – the NCCS is here to help! Reach out to us about anything at any time. We're here for you on the good days, the bad days and the "I just need to talk" days. We have your best interest in mind and want to see you succeed!
